Our topic "Are all men like that?"

How do we know when a behaviour is from having Asperger's Syndrome or from just being "blokey"?

Brainstorm and discussion facilitated by male group member involved in men's counselling and group facilitation

ASPIA Lunch Club dining together prior to ASPIA Meeting

Upstairs at the rear of the Avondale Hotel, Burwood Road, opposite Hungry Jacks.
Arrive any time between 12noon & 2pm. All welcome.

ASPIA is a support group specifically focused on the support & recovery needs of the non-Asperger partner in a relationship. Please see page 2 of the Newsletter, and also our website for information about support groups specifically for adults with Asperger's Syndrome.

Applications for Membership of ASPIA INC are invited from partners, ex-partners and others who identify as needing support, information and understanding from the non-Asperger perspective. This is not in any means to be seen as discriminatory, but focused on the needs of one group of people with a shared experience and who have no other safe or relevant place to discuss issues and gain insights (parents of adults with AS are also welcomed).

Membership is $55.00 per person/family per year and entitles members to discounts, library borrowing rights and inclusion on a peer support contact list.

We appreciate your financial support, even if you can't attend meetings

Some thoughts ...

Recently I read in some study notes: “There is always an emotional climate of respect and acceptance when there is empathy. This allows us to feel safe and free to reveal ourselves as we are, without the defensive barriers which we have erected over the years.” Don’t we all long to be in a family, group or community where this takes place, mutually?

I’ve been thinking a lot about empathy. So many things we read about Asperger’s Syndrome state that people with AS do not have empathy. Some people with Asperger’s Syndrome dispute this. I am wondering too.

Do they just appear to lack empathy because they are not reading the cues and non-verbal clues such as facial expression and body language? Some have suggested that they do have empathy but they just don’t know how to express it. If they’re uncertain about what is expected, perhaps it’s safer not to risk getting it wrong. Some say they have so much empathy that it overwhelms them and cripples them. Perhaps all of these possibilities are true. We know from testimonies that some people with AS are devastated when they finally realise how their actions or words have been hurting their partners. Sadly, others continue to combat every suggestion with denial, and some continue to remain absorbed only in what’s happening for them.

Over the last two months I have been exchanging emails and thoughts with some adults with AS who accept & understand their own AS. I have been noticing that there is a significant flow of empathy in these exchanges that has surprised me and warmed my heart. It has occurred to me that, rather than being a barrier between partners, perhaps a computer screen could actually become a conductor to re-connect the hearts and minds of people who were once friends. In our meetings we mention that writing to or emailing our partners could assist with communication. It seems to be face to face situations that are too much for an AS person to process - the words, the tone, the volume, the facial expression, the body language, the emotion – all at once. Emailing eliminates most of these aspects and allows time for thought and response.

I know we long for meaningful face-to-face communication, but perhaps there are some things we have to accept in our journey to understand AS. Maybe emailing can provide a stepping stone to new possibilities.
